Portfolio and Market Commentary

Supportive of eventual Fed rate cuts, the month saw heretofore sticky overall inflation soften, ever so slightly, across the US, as implied rent and used car prices move beyond their peak strengths. Markets have smiled, with many equity indices at record highs, and government curves steepening in tune.

After two years of record Fed hikes and even worse inflation, pain is slowly having an effect: US employment quality continues to worsen if not weaken, while housing stalls. As Europe goes nowhere, now both China and Japan are all in to inspire growth; their desired currency weakness exporting deflation while puffing the USD higher.

Other negative trends persist: insane deficit spending from the US to France; continued dumping of UST for gold (Japan, BRICs); supply chain impediments continue (see container rates), from Ukraine-Russia, Israel-Gaza, Panama Canal drought and the Houthi's Red Sea.

Economics has been a side-show of late compared to politics; Trump/Biden in the US; France, UK domestics and EU-wide trends, each a sea-change. Others are better suited than us to opine, but what is clear is a lack of focus on growth policies, at the expense of increased nationalistic priorities. None speaking to dire continuation of current deficits with unending explosion of unfunded future liabilities, across the entirety of the DM and EM world.

When one focuses on credit, however, several tailwinds persist; companies refinancing at the lows of the zero interest rate world of the last few years, combined with significant balance sheet repair across several industries, from energy to shipping to airlines. Two outliers not participating: consumer discretionary and commercial real estate.

The Fund experienced solid performance during the month, from both yield and positive events; contributors including International Personal Finance, Brooge, and ABRA, as we cautiously reinvest in attractive credit opportunities. Themes continue across energy, shipping, autos, telecoms and more idiosyncratic financials.
